

Centre for Socially Restorative Urbanism: a manifesto for change

a seminar in the Place, Inclusivity and Environment Research Cluster series about the interface of human habitation and urban space

Kevin Thwaites

Tuesday 26th April 12-2pm, Arts Tower Floor 11 Seminar Room

Socially Restorative Urbanism lays foundations for new ways of thinking about the relationship between urban spatial structure and social processes, re-introducing a more explicit human dimension into the decisions we make when shaping our urban habitat. It integrates two new concepts: the transitional edge - a socio-spatial concept of the urban realm; and experiemics – a participative process that acts to redress imbalances in territorial relationships.

The seminar will trace the past, present and future of Socially Restorative Urbanism thinking, paving the way for new cross-disciplinary, people-oriented approaches to urban place-making.
