

Citing Archives: University of Sheffield Special Collections, Heritage and Archives Guidance

Archives are original, primary sources of information which are largely unpublished manuscripts.

It is important to reference archives to show that your research is based on documentary evidence. It also allows readers of your work to locate the sources and verify information.

There is not one fixed referencing guide for each type of primary source but the below can be followed and adapted to suit any referencing style.

Elements in a Citation

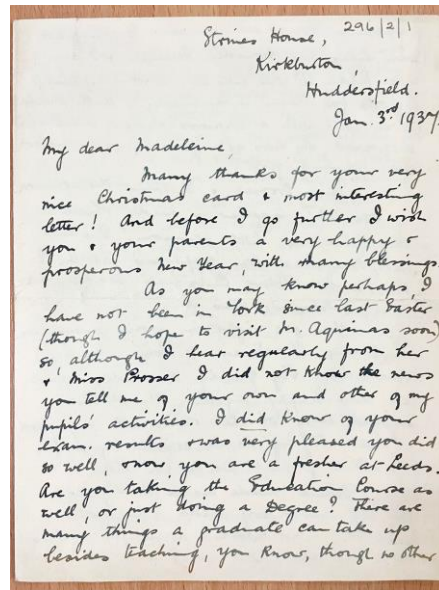

Citations generally need to contain the following information:

- Name of the institution which holds the item(s)
- Title and information about the item(s) such as the creator, date, page. You may need to create a title yourself if an item doesn't have one
- Reference code, reference number or catalogue reference: the alphanumeric code used to identify, describe and locate the item(s)
